1.0 INTRODUCTION

Tourism and tourist are words, which are commonly heard or mentioned, in every day life. Pick up any newspaper and you will find some reference to tourism (e.g., Tribune of every Wednesday/Friday of the week and Vanguard of Friday of every week) in relation to government policy, tourist arrivals, products, destination, impact on economy, hospitality of the local people etc. But how often have you attempted to understand the meaning of tourism or asked the question who is a tourist? Well, this unit attempts to define for you the words “tourism” and “tourist” both technically as well as conceptually. Then it goes on to comprehend the concepts related to tourism and its characteristics. It also takes into account the difference forms and types of tourism along explaining to you the terms like tourist destination and tourist product, etc. Knowledge of these aspects is must for a tourism professional as well as for anyone interested in pursuing tourism studies.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

After reading this unit you will be able to:

- Define tourism
- Understand the tourism phenomenon
- Explain the characteristic of tourism
- Outline the reasons for the growth of tourism
- Define the different motivations that determine the increasing diversity of tourism
- Understand the origin and development of Mass Tourism and Package holiday

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Tourism Phenomenon

Tourism is concerned with pleasure, holidays, travel and going or arriving somewhere. These are the motivations that make people leave their “normal” place of work and residence for short-term temporary visits to “other” places.

Tourism is concerned with consuming goods and services.

For example, you need some mode of transport, some form of accommodation to stay and soon. However, the only reason for the consumption of such services and goods is that we have a pleasurable experience or that we enjoy ourselves. Apart from enjoyment is the fact that these goods and services are different from what we typically consume everyday. Another aspect of enjoyment is that we:

- look at a set of different landscapes, cultures, and lifestyles, and see different people and hear other languages, etc.

Because we are "going away" what we look at and experience becomes something out of the ordinary, something unique. In fact, we anticipate the new experience and these leads us to view it with greater interest and curiosity. However, few of us realize that in the production of this pleasant experience, many professionals and experts help to develop and construct our viewing.

How this experience has changed and developed depends on a variety of factors, such as:

- historic period we are looking at
- social groups we belong to
- society we live in

The tourist gaze is, therefore, on a "difference" i.e., the difference between the practice of tourism and other non-tourism social practices, like paid work and domestic life or like the difference between taking a bus to go for work and taking a bus to a tourist destination.

Tourism, as a significant social phenomenon, involves a temporary break with normal routine to engage with experiences that contrast with everyday life, with the mundane.

Almost all travel types - the explorer, the pilgrim, the monk, the merchant, the student, the missionary, the hermit, the refugee, the conqueror, the cure-seeker, etc. can be prototypes of the modern tourist.

3.2 What is Tourism?

Well, the touristism comprises several social practices. All these have the minimal common characteristic that they are different and they are departure from normal life. These minimal characteristics help us to define tourism, which accords into W.T.O. (World Tourism Organization) as the movement of people away from their normal place of residence and work for a period of not less than 24 hours and not more than 1 year.

Tourism is a factitious leisure activity because it coexists with its opposite, that is regulated and organized work. This shows that in modern societies, work and leisure...
sure are organized as separate and regulated areas
Toursim involves the movement of people, and their stay at various destinations. This involves journeys and services like transport, accommodation, catering, and viewing, etc. The journey to and stay at sites outside the normal place of work and residence for a short period. There is a clear intention to "go away" or "return home." We must remember that tourism sites are not connected with paid work, and they offer a contrast with sites where a person's work and residence are relocated.

A substantial proportion of the population engages in going away on holiday. Hence, new socialized forms of the provision of goods and services are developed in the tourism sector, which has a different character from that of the traveler. Because travel has an individual character, whereas tourism has a mass character. Tourism is directed at places chosen for the anticipation of "build a daydreaming" and fantasy of intense pleasure because such places are different from what we normally encounter. Such anticipation is sustained through a rough variety of experiences, which influence our daily lives like file, TV, fiction, magazines, records, videos, etc. which constructs and reinforces the image of a tourist destination.

The tourist's gaze is directed towards a landscape, a town, or an event by pointing out those features that are separate from everyday life. Whilst many features are viewed as a place because we are out of the ordinary, there is much more emphasis on the visual elements because we have never been there before through photographs, postcards, films, etc., which were capture the site through personal experiences. Tourism, therefore, also involves the recognition and collection of signs that represent reality of an other-time and another-place. For example, camel rides in the desert, for a person who honesides in the hills.

A number of tourism professionals emerge and develop these signs. They attempt to create new and new objects for the consumption of the tourist's gaze. What they produce and why it becomes an object of tourism, or why it becomes popular depends on the competition between the travel trade for the attention of the tourist on the one hand, and the other, the changing class, gender, and generational distinction of taste within the group of potential visitors. For example, one may stay in a five-star hotel or a guest house, one may take a pilgrimage or beach holiday, one may go on a package tour or the trekking holiday alone.

Finally, tourism has also become a status symbol in modern society and thought. It is a necessary to ones health. Today, 40% of free time is devoted to travel in developed countries. 429 billion in 1990 and by the year 2000, tourism services will probably be the largest sources of employmentintheworld. These statistics reflect the fact that many new tourist sites are opening all over the world, and tourism is now a global phenomenon.

SELFASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Mention and discuss those things that motivate people to leave their normal place of work and abode for temporary visits to other places.

3.3 Concepts

Film, pleasure and entertainment are concepts popularly associated with tourism. Many writers like Boorstin and Baudrillard have said that because tourists traveling in guided groups are isolated from the host environment and people, because they are encapsulated in places, hotels and air-conditioned buses, they remain in an "environmental bubble." Such tourists look for western facilities wherever they go and therefore they participate in "pseudo-events" because they don't encounter the real world on the street level. As a consequence, tourist entrepreneurs and the local people reproduce displays for gullible tourists. These, over time and with the help of the media, become images which are the basis of illusions associated with the sites where tourism occurs. Thus, there is a paradox in understanding tourism which is defined by its opposite, work and routine, yet is engaged in reproducing the familiar (like hotel, etc.) which insulates the tourist from the strangeness of the destination or the host environment.

The mass society tourist is located in a very secured and protected environment where this sensesc are necessary restricted. The tourist never learns to decipher the complex and alien cultures which cannot be simplified and mass produced easily. Hence, we end up with a monotonous image of a uniform tourism that is shotel, beach and local colour.

But tourism is not only a mass phenomenon. Cohen maintains that there are a variety of tourist types and modes of tourist experience. Hence, it is necessary to:

- Define the tourist
- Understand how tourism emerges from a basic division between the ordinary/everyday and the extraordinary. Explain the characteristics of the tourist product.
- List types of destinations and identify their attractions, and explain in what is a tourist.
3.4 Defining Tourism

Over the years, the definition of tourism has undergone change along with the historical changes. According to Hunziker and Krapf, tourism is "the sum of the phenomena and relationships arising from the travel and stay of nonresidents, insofar as it does not lead to permanent residence and is not connected to any earning activity". This definition emphasizes travel and stay, but excludes day trips, business trips, etc. and the overlapping of these boundaries with other practices.

The League of Nations in 1937 recommended that tourism cover the social activity of those who travel for a period of 24 hours or more in a country other than the one a person usually lives in. However, the limitation of this definition was that it excluded domestic and emphasized only international tourism.

The Rome conference on Tourism in 1963 adopted the recommendation to replace the term "tourist" with the term "visitor" and defined tourism as a visit "to a country other than one's own or where one usually resides and works", for the following reasons.

1) Tourism is the activity of temporary visitors staying at least 24 hours for leisure, business, family, mission or meeting.
2) Excursion is the activity of a temporary visitor staying less than 24 hours but excluding people in transit.

The definition also excludes the domestic tourist, although it did recognize the day visitor.

The tourism society of Britain in 1976 proposed to clarify the concept of tourism by saying that "Tourism is the temporary, short-term movement of people to destinations outside the places where they normally live and work, and their activities during their stay at these destinations, including day visits and excursions".

AIEST in 1981, refined the concept and held that "Tourism may be defined in terms of particular activities selected by choice and undertaken outside the home environment. Tourism may or may not involve overnight stays away from home". These definitions indicate that tourism has expanded its range and scope. The concept of tourism has broadened to include all forms of the phenomenon of leisure activity. Today, we may define Mass Tourism as the quest of someone who travels to see something different and is dissatisfied when he finds that things are not the same as at home. This definition reflects the orientation of global tourism, which is concentrated in Western Societies where 60% of international tourists arrivals are received and from where 70% of the tourists originate. Because the control of tourism is centered in the West, the concepts associated with tourism are necessarily influenced by the social practices of these societies rather than the travel heritage of the non-western cultures and developing societies.

The movement of tourists from the place of origin to the destination is further described as:

- International Tourism, when the travel is from one country to another, and
- Domestic Tourism, when the travel is within the country, i.e., trips taken by tourists within his/her ncountry or where the origin and destination are in the same country.

In international tourism, you will come across two other items.

1) Inbound: This refers to tourists entering a country
2) Outbound: This refers to tourists leaving their country of origin for another.

However, these terms apply in the case of outward travel only at its beginning. We must remember that on the journey back at tourist is only returning to the place of residence and he cannot be termed as an inbound tourist. But at the same time, an inbound tourist can also be an outbound tourist. For example, you decide to go to Cuba. From the point of view of Nigeria, you will be described as an outbound tourist, but Cuba will describe you as an inbound tourist.

3.5 Tourism Products and Services

In relation to tourism, very often you will come across terms like tourism product and services. Here, we attempt to define them. The purchase of a tourist is speculative investment by the tourist, who anticipates the pleasure of consumption of such a product will result in. Tourism consumption and anticipation are related to the visitor's experience of the basic necessities and comfort provided, leisure activities are also organized. However, it is often said that selling tourism is similar to selling dreams; for example, a tourist is more than buying a more collection of services, like an aircraft seat, a hotel bed, meals, and the opportunity to see the National Assembly Complex in Abuja. The tourist is buying, temporarily, a strange environment including unique climate and geographical features and intangible benefits like bargain, luxury services, hospitality, atmosphere, aculture and heritage.

The tourist product is therefore both physical and psychological construct on which is challenged to transform dreams into reality.
problem in meetings such as challenges that different cultures have different priorities and codes but the global tourism professional requires a universal (often termed as western) standard of satisfaction. Apart from the problem of quality control, there is always the element of change which can destroy the most well-organized tour. This can be due to natural or man-made reasons, accidents or sudden and unforeseen circumstances. Risks are high in tourism services because these services are considered luxurious and often not given the same attention as essential services. Local people often express hostility to tourism because they see it as an expression of (5) five-star culture, extending the gap between their lifestyle and that of the tourist.

For the producer of the service there are also risks. Taxis are consumed in tourist destinations. They cannot be tested, seen, sampled or compared in advance. They depend on reputation earned by the satisfaction of previous users and on advertising. Services are also created in a particular historical and social context and are affected by work culture. Moreover, the supply of services is fixed and created in advance and risk of underconsumption has to be borne by the producer because travel services cannot be restored. For example, an unused aircraft seat or an empty hotel room cannot be carried over to another day or time of place. It has a value where and when it is offered for use. Thus, the carrying capacity and demand for a service have to be carefully assessed and estimated. For example, it is often claimed that one of the constraints of tourist movement in India is the shortage of airline seats. To make up for this, airlines have displaced 20 percent of India Airlines traffic rather than meeting the shortage by generating new demand. This creates a crisis situation for both India Airlines as well as air taxi operators along with a loss of 6.5 crores (Indian money) in foreign exchange.

In developing countries, the risk cannot be carried from one tourist season to another. Apart from the demand/supply constraints and socio-political factors, operators and providers of services are also affected by weather conditions (like hot weather and the monsoons). They are also constrained by lack of capital to invest in marketing. In many cases, they depend to a large extent on the informal sector or what is termed as the 'tourism' that creates harassment. However, the small-scale operator depends heavily on the informal application and direct contact of the informal services of touts and brokers for his profitability.

1.0 Introduction

As a follow up to unit 1, this unit goes to comprehend the concepts related to tourism, tours and its characteristics, different kinds of vacation and constraints that may work against the tourist interest as well as type sand forms of tourism.

2.0 Objectives

After reading this unit, you should be able to:

- Know what tourists
- Appreciate how purpose of visit determines the nature of the tourist
- Tourist destination, and
- The different types of tourism

3.0 Main Content

3.1 Tours and Their Characteristics

Tours and their characteristics are closely linked to the motivation of the tourist. Motivation or purpose of visit it usually:

- Holiday or vacation, including a visit with friends and relations
- Meetings
- And conferences, including other business activities, health and sports,
- Religion and culture, or
Special interests, including study tours, etc.
The purpose of visit determines the nature of the tours in the following ways:

i) Are you free to choose your constraint?
ii) Is price a constraint?
iii) Is time a constraint?
iv) Is quality a determining factor?
v) What facilities and services do you require?

Tours can be within national boundaries or in any place in the world. Such a decision will have an impact on the country of both; the country of origin and the tourist's destination site. Tours also focus on unique natural geographical features like the coastline, islands, mountain, health resorts, countryside, etc. At such locations, the provision of tourist services and the pressure of tourists are bound to have impact on the environment, economy, local, social practices and on the people.

The time period a tour includes will depend on factors like:

SELFASSESSMENTEXERCISE

Thetimeandperiodthatatourincludes dependsofcertain factors. Mentio and discuss 5 of such factors.
3.1.1 Tourists

The tourists, apart from being a holidaymaker or businessman, can also be interdependent on region, nationality, socioeconomic class, age and sex. Behavioural aspects like stage in the life cycle, nationality and educational levels also help to identify specific target groups or market segments. This term is often used to describe profiling the tourist. Such a definitional refinement helps to collect data on what the tourist is really looking for at the destination. Such data also helps to understand tourism and to see how tourism-related practices differ between different market segments. This information helps the industry to design products and develop strategies appropriate to the needs of the market. Such data also enables activists, who may be local activists networking with international groups to control the form of tourism being developed at a particular destination and to:

- Intervene in the type of development being planned, and maximize the benefits from tourism and minimize negative impacts.

3.1.2 The Tourist Destinations

A destination is both a site and an event, and these two factors are the attractions. In a site attraction, a location exercises appeal like the Zuma Rock, the Suntan Beach or the Methodist Cathedral. With an event acting as a pull, tourists are drawn to a particular place because of what is happening at the location. Where both site and event are present because of what is happening at the location, both site and event have attractions like the Eyo in Lagos, the Argungu Fishing Festival in Sokoto and the Jos Wild-life Garden, the success of such a destination multiplies.

Destinations can be spread over wide geographical areas. The attraction to a destination lies in the image it has, or the attractions it offers.

3.2 Tourism: Forms and Types

Today, people are feverishly participating in tourism. This may include short trips during the week, weekend breaks or longer journeys during holidays. Older pensioners have a dream of retiring to a place where the weather is good and the price is slow. Without any outside pressure, millions of people flock to destinations of their own free will. Long lines of cars, crowded buses and trains and jumbo jets go all over the world. As a result, the beaches become too small, shops and restaurants too crowded, sporting facilities and the environment degraded and worn.
down with years of being admired and used. For an increasing number of people, work is no longer the main purpose of life and this encourages tourism. Modern tourism is one of the most striking phenomena of our times and tourism offers an opportunity to learn, to enrich humanity and to identify what may be termed goals for a better life and a better society. But conservationists want to change things. They want to arrest the 'land scape eaters' who have transformed the countryside with their mass migration.

Forms and types of tourism emerge within the context of changing social values. For example, in modern society, the value of 'being' has been superseded by the value of 'having'. Possession, property, wealth, egoism and consumption have become more important than community, tolerance, moderation, sensibility and modesty. As a result, in all parts of the world:

- Economy is characterized by increasing concentration of wealth, division of labour and specialization.
- Environment is being treated as if resources are renewable. The limit of the eco-system are stretched without considering the negative aspects, and people's rights are constantly eroded to meet the need of the powersystem, etc.

What effect does Possession, Property, Wealth, Egoism, etc. have on modern tourism?

Forms of tourism emerge from different fields of tensions such as: work/rest, awake/asleep, exertion/relaxation, income/expenditure, job/family, freedom/necessity and risk/security. Similarly, dirt, noise, rush, pollution and trouble are all key expressions of such tension. The possibility of going away is very important insuch a context.

The desire for tourism is therefore determined socially. Governments promote tourism, people talk about their holidays, union-sponsored holidays, health insurance, employee rewards, travel instead of bonus money. Seasonal pressures strengthen the urge to get away from home. Annual vacations, the media, literature and fashion all strengthen the holiday mania. The tourism industry whets the appetite with tantalizing offers of entertainment and pleasure. The commercialization of recreation functions with the well-established principles of a free market economy. In the past, in the erstwhile socialist countries, holiday homes and limited foreign travel were subsidized for workers. In some countries of the world, for example, there is still a transport... subsidy system called "leave Travel concession" and most companies provide holiday homes for their workers, but tourism is primarily a private enterprise. A study of tourist brochures indicates the success ful design of a tourist visit:

1) Create a holiday mood by emphasizing leisure, abandonment, serenity, freedom, pleasure.
2) Show time, standing still, romanticism and relaxation, peace and space.
3) Show something beautiful that is not available at home. And typical holidays include symbols like the sun, beach umbrella, a plan fringed coastline, etc.
4) Show people from other cultures, always beaming, happy, friendly and idle.

All four ingredients form the tourism mix. However, in today's context, the different types of tourism are as follows:

1) Rest and Recuperation

Taking a rest from everyday life; relieve the stresses of societies that have shifted from manual to sedentary work. Tourism as diversion or compensation to holiday destinations is what may be called holiday or vacation travel which is focused on resorts and beach holidays, both domestic and international.

2) Escape

Tourism as a mass flight from everyday reality to an imaginary world of freedom. This flight takes place within the movements from centers to peripheries or in other words, a North-Shout migration.

3) Communication

Spending quality time with family and friends, making new friends and acquaintances. This mass tourism, in herds, enjoying the facilities of tourism enclaves.

4) Culture and Education

Such tourism is based on sight-seeing to experience and see other countries of the world though not necessarily in depth.
5) Freedom

Tourism frees you from home and work and is directed towards facilities and comfort rather than experience.

6) Health

Visits spas, goes to saunas, undergoes cures for chronic ailments, visits health clubs for workouts or does yoga, i.e., travel for health.

7) Special Interest Tours

Is organized as per the special interests of the tourists ranging from medical, historical, archaeological and other interests to golf or fishing.

8) Adventure and Wild Life

Far away from modern civilization, with bearers and porters and mules, camels, elephants, jeeps, mixing trekking and hiking and camp life with the luxury of a first-class hotel.

9) Convention Tourism

To mix leisure with work, holiday conventions or meetings at tourist destinations.

Different forms of tourism also give rise to different types of tourists.

1) The ridiculous tourist who is dressed in funny clothes and views everything through the lens of a camera.

2) The naïve tourist who is inexperienced in travel always asks unnecessary questions and has no language skills.

3) The organized tourist who feels at home with a guide and a group of fellow tourists.

4) The ugly tourist who behaves as if he owns the world.

5) The uncultured tourist who is a beach bum and spends his time lazing and eating.

6) The rich tourist who can afford anything, likes to show prosperity and enjoy being waited upon.

7) The exploiting tourist who spends a holiday at the cost of people and takes advantage of their culture, hospitality and poverty.

8) The pollution tourist who demands that for his comfort, everything is flattened and destroyed.

9) The alternative tourist who explores the few untouched corners of the world, thus opening the way to mass tourism.
3.3 Future Trends

A recent BBC programme entitled "Wish you weren't there" underlines the concern today at what the golden Hordes have done to the world environment and fragile communities and cultures. There was a time the UN promoted tourism because:

1) A transfer of wealth from the rich to the poor was possible. 2) Regional imbalances could be overcome in areas where there were no other development resources. 3) Provide employment to people with low educational and skill levels. 4) Give rise to economic growth with circulation of the tourist's dollar.

After four decades of organized Mass Tourism, today the option for the future is sustainable Tourism, or tourism controlled by the local people at their pace and in answer to their needs. The essential aspect of sustainable tourism is the concept of carrying capacity, that is, a control on the number of tourists as well as the type of tourism to be developed.

Carrying capacity is a concept that has to be kept in mind in the needs of:
a) The environment
b) The level of development both economic and social culture
c) e

d) Population and its needs in the present and in the future tourism
e) vs. other forms of economic activity.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

SWERSTOSELFASSESSMENTEXERCISE Motivation purposes of visit are usually:

1) Holiday or vacation, including visit with friends and relations

4.0 CONCLUSION

Going through this unit, you've learnt things about tours, their characteristics, who is a tourist, the tourist destinations and the forms and types of tourism.

5.0 SUMMARY

You have seen that people do not just travel except they are motivated to do so in different ways. It is essential to note that sometimes, potential tourists could face some constraints that may prevent them from carrying out their heart's desire. Tourism has certain impacts on the environment as well as the economy. Such an impact could be positive or negative depending on the degree of control.

While looking at the future trends, a variety of factors have to be accounted for. For example, now there is emphasis on the Alternative or Sustainable Tourism as people begin to assert their rights and demand control.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

In Units 1 and 2, we discussed the different types and forms of tourism. Tourism of today is no longer what it was 50 years back and it will change further in the years to come. A crucial role is played by motivation in this process of change.

In fact, motivation or the purposes of a tourist considerably affect the various components of the Tourism Industry.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

After reading this unit, you should be able to:

- Outline the reasons for the growth of tourism,
- Define the different motivations that determine the increasing diversity of tourism,
- Understand the origin and development of Mass Tourism and package holidays.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Changing Trend

Tourism had transformed considerably from its earlier motivations, i.e. mainly by business and religion, by the 19th century. In Europe and America, it is now part of the lifestyle of not only the aristocracy but also the merchants and the professional classes. It has come within the reach of the industrial workforce as well.

Between the two World Wars, in the industrialized countries, the mass of the people had higher expectations and greater entitlements. This was because of increasing incomes and holidays and entitlements. Technology brought the means of transport (particularly the automobile) within their reach and material conditions of life were much better than the days of depression with the postwar economic boom. In the 1960s, the postwar economic boom began to spread much more widely and internationally. Tourism began to reach mass markets around the globe. Such changes were profound to have an impact not only on the nature but also on the numbers participating in touristic activity.

Mass Tourism, a phenomenon on which we can see emerging in some advanced countries of the world today, India as an example of the third world countries, was primarily domestic-business up to the 1950s in most of the countries. International tourism started about 5% of tourist activity in the 1930s and 40s. By the 1970s, foreign holidays accounted for 20% of long vacations by Americans, Britons and Europeans. The focus of Mass Tourism was these seaside resorts and spas in Europe and the National Parks and natural beauty around summer camps in America. Traveling by rail or by car, the middleclass tourist used boarding houses or hospitality of friends and relatives or holiday camps to make the budget for the holiday extend.

Private operators provided cheap accommodation, mass catering with an range of entertainment possibilities at the site. Britain, France and Germany were the leaders in this movement. This early idea of "packaging" soon spread to the up-market hotels that began to include swimming, tennis and dancing in their facilities. Tents, caravans and chalets came up for those who wanted a less regimented and more flexible holiday plan. The Club Mediterranean, a total resort concept that emerged for the need of a group of young French families looking for a complete holiday, soon spread to all regions of the world. A total resort required tremendous commercial ability which the travel trade had acquired by the mid 20th century. As suppliers of the tourist product, they expanded their output and sharpened their marketing skills. From the increasingly sophisticated market research emerged the revealing concept of motivation and its diversity or changeability amongst different group sof tourists. Expertise in dealing with motivation led to the development of different types of tourism which involved a large number of tourists.

A key role in this movement was played by the jet aircraft. By the 1970s wide bodied jets with a capacity of 400 passengers reduced the cost of air travel and the mass tourism emerged at resorts all over the world.

Countries around the world began to notice the impact of tourism on the national and global economy. Destinations began to make themselves up in the age of a particular market segment. Those destinations that catered to the largest number of overseas tourists came to be stereotyped as "Tourist Ghettos" because they looked alike and offered facilities that we restandardized. Today, as new destinations are emerging, the international stereotype is giving way to ethnic types, which have an underlying uniformity with a wof local culture and identity.

SELFASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Explain the role of Technology in the development of tourism in the early days.

3.2 Purpose of Tourism

You may ask questions, what motivates a tourist? Why tourism? Or what is the purpose of tourism? These are pertinent questions and the answers are particularly relevant for those who are or intending to become tourism professionals.
3.2.1 Sun, Sea, Sand and Sex

This is known in American parlance as the 4 S formula of tourism. Seabathing with access to a beach (sandy) and good weather (Sunshine) is an expectation of tourists who want to escape from cold temperature to tropical climates. Newfashionable concepts also dictate the craze for asuntanned skin over the pale complexion. The current health faddism also dictates the use for activity over indolence. Overcrowding, which appeals further to destinations in Africa and Asia. For example, you may hear such comments at a beach "Oh! How peaceful, lovely. I hope it does not become crowded like the one back home."

Many analysts have described this form (4S) as "Tourismina Ghetto". They do not emphasize the artificiality of a created reservation which has made tourism an elitist touristic image or touristic gaze. Included in this category are hotel complexes, holiday tours and his resorts. Natural and scenic beauty is merely a backdrop to playing the same games, reading the same newspaper, watching the same TV shows, and dining the same food. Local serving personnel are perhaps the only unique ingredient of such tailor-made resorts and are considered sufficient to represent the country in which a particular resort is located. The model of such a type is the "club med" which is oftendescribed as the most honest touristic formula. Although sneered by the cultural critic because it incorporates many actual motives and states quite openly that it aims at complete relaxation "it is the idea of paradise, a garden of Eden, in which people are free and unconstrained and everywhere body can be happy in their own way". This is real life, and such life is available in the most exclusive regions of the world in enclaves where the tourist can abandon himself to pursue leisure uninterrupted. In this holiday theater based on glamour, glitter, fun, entertainment, sport and buffets, a holiday becomes a prelude from daily life, which is unreal. The show opens up to delighting views of culture, fairsightseeing, and performances by local women and men. At times these remain meaningless rituals to the tourists. Yet, they expose the performer to a state of corruption that is often justified by themay you earn them.

For example, Lizard Stewart joint thousand of Western tourists who visit the East every year. They are both 18 and have saved up the whole year for their 2-week vacation. They are determined to enjoy themselves and to relax. They plant to see ancient monasteries or visit bazaars and shops and spend lavishly on exotic bargains. They already have spent a good amount on fashionable holiday wardrobes, cameras, personal stereos and design sunglasses. They are both sociable and chatty and would like to meet young men and women wherever they go. They are excited at the thought that they will be away from family and other social controls. They also want to return with an excellent suntan and lying on a beach poolside. The people at the destination they visit might be poor, living much harder lives and working longer hours, perhaps in tourism-related services to earn a living. Many may be conservative and religious. They may frown at certain activities that Lizard and Stew art consider normal holiday behaviour and their dress codes will be different. Many among them may object to freedom of them and women to socialize together. Yet, they may tolerate tourists turning away their eyes because for the local people, hospitality, which was once a source of honour has now become a means of earning a living. They now view the tourists as wealthy and extravagant.

In recent times, the 4S’s formula has been expanded to include golf, asport which is extremely popular in the more affluent countries of the world, and particularly in Japan. The Japanese have set targets for outbound tourists and in 1993, 15 million Japanese took off for golfing holidays all over the world. Hawaii and Australia are the most favoured destinations, mixing beach and golf facilities. The game is very expensive in Japan and there is a space limitation too. Because of this, many Asian countries are now multiplying golf courses at every suitable location. Malaysia is setting a target of 122 courses by 1994. Many tourism experts condone golf tourism as being environmentally friendly. However, in Japan itself, there have been several studies indicating that golfing greens pollute the underground water facilities. The colouring and chemicals used to maintain the green areas are a harm to industrial effluents.

Studies in Thailand also indicate that culturally women caddies double as prostitutes to earn an extra income, since most of them are from agricultural communities that are very poor.

3.2.2 Leisure, Touring, Sightseeing, Culture

Such tourists like to wander, not content to remain in one place of complex, but preferring to stay in a different place every night or so. This is akin to cramming or choosing courses of notable countries, monuments, people, places, and culture. Ther is a motivation to both self-education and self-esteem. The camera is an essential ingredient of such tourists whose 'touristic' lens view is considered to be more authentic than reality. Often the framing of the destination via the tourist gaze is the visible pressure that motivates such tourists towards touristic itineraries.

The destinations visited by such tourists are more varied and widespread than the 4 S. The linear or modal itineraries also require much better transport network and capacity and hotels to provide their best.
services particularly check-in/check-out and room services for frequent guest/room charges. Although the interest segments may vary, the demand for services is invariably the same. A tendency develops to create "circuits" on "mild run" routes on the basis of infrastructural strengths as well as local support to the daily turnover of tourists. Such tourists therefore also fall into the mass package category.

3.2.3 Visiting Friends and Relations (VFR)

This form is a strong motivation for domestic tourism in majority of developing countries. You see this in everyday life. For example, Popoola wants to visit his friend at Lagos. He also decides to see all the tourist attractions in Lagos. He may also utilize a day to go to Aguda to meet his classmate James and also see the National Theatre of Iganmu. Similarly, Veronica in Nigeria wants to visit her friend at Abuja. She also decides to see all the tourist attractions in Abuja like the National Assembly complex, the International Conference Center, Abuja Gardens, etc.

This segment is of great importance to the transport sector. But it is not considered economically significant by the providers of accommodation, food and beverage services. This is because they stay and eat with their host e.g. friends or relatives. At times when people have none of their own they try to find one through someone. These tourists do not exercise freedom to choose their destinations, but do show an interest in the tourist attractions that the town or city offers.

For example, a visit to a friend in Lagos also offers beaches, amusement parks and shopping complexes.

The VFR tourist makes use of the surface infrastructure for tourism in much the same way as the business traveller and often participates in linear or modal itineraries online with domestic and international tourists. Tourists often use friends and relations sashoststovisitareasofinterest. In Nigeria, we have seen an interesting combination of VFR and LTC to subsidize the cost of transport and accommodation so that there will be enough money to spend on sightseeing, leisure, recreation and shopping.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What effect sdo you think visiting frie nds and relations has on the hospitality industry-the hostels?
3.2.4 Business and Incentive Travel

Business travellers need often overlap with those of the holidaymaker. The only difference is that business strips are not directed towards touristic centers or resorts, rather the demand is directed to centers of trade and commerce diplomacy. They may demand special services like communication and secretarial facilities, meeting and convention facilities, car rental and accommodation, with less emphasis on recreational facilities, although swimming pools and health clubs are popular services today.

A special area of interest to touristic destinations is conference, fairs, and exhibitions. Today, there many organizations that feel that their executives are more creative and productive in a resort atmosphere. Hence, the number of corporate conferences is on the increase. Public and Private Sector, associations and professional bodies, trade unions and political parties are also customers for convention-cum-tourism complexes.

The needs for communication and specialization have led to annual meetings of associations and professional bodies not only to meet and discuss new ideas and strategies but also to exhibit new products, new trends or product lines.

Fairs and exhibitions are a reflection of the health of an economy and give an opportunity to the participants to sample some of the local tourism offers. An area of emerging importance to the tourism industry is incentive travel or travel of a touristic nature as a reward for some special achievement or contribution of an employee to the firm. Most employees consider a paid holiday as a desirable perk because their standard of living ensures that there is no consumer durable that they don’t have or can’t afford. International travel is however something not more than 10% to 15% can afford.

Secondly, the firm’s incentives usually of a higher quality and standard than what an employee can afford on his or her own budget terms of services, distance and the length of stay at a resort.

Most tour operators find the incentive tour attractive because it includes up-market rates with people whom may not have the discrimination tastes of the upper crust. Such services often overlap with mass tourists who are directed towards resort or on the sightseeing circuits. The Indian Association of Tour Operators (IATO) considers the incentive tour market an important segment for long haul destination like India. A similar association like the one in Nigeria is the National Association of Nigerian Tour Operators (NANTO).

1.0 INTRODUCTION

In Unit 3, we discussed the changing and purpose of tourism. Motivations not only determine tourists’ behaviour, but are being critically analyzed to determine the future needs of tourism. Hence, it is necessary for tourism professionals or learners of Tourism Studies to know why people tour/travel. Tied with this is the question why people opt for a particular destination or why a specific destination attracts tourists? This unit takes into account, the special interest or taste of tourists and at the same time examines alternative tourism.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

After reading this unit, you should be able to:

- Analyze the factors that influence the demand for tourism, as well as the decision-making process for individuals, and determine the relationship between motivation, destination and tourist product.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Special Interest

In contemporary culture, there is a dissolving of the boundaries between high and low cultures as well as between different cultural forms such as tourism, art, education, photography, T.V., music, sport, shopping and architecture, etc. All these forms lend themselves to the area of Special Interest tourism which deviates from Mass Tourism because it does not consider people within a particular destination to be similar or to each other. With shared tastes and characteristics, Special Interest tourism is determined by the providers of services. However, the increasing and changing power of different social classes also determines the importance of these areas of cultural production for Special Interest Tourism. As the collective power of the working class declined and the service and middle classes increased after the post world war period, new forms of tourism were regenerated in the west. The new cultural economy that these classes created related to people consciousness, disposition, tastes and dislikes. Special Interest Tourism rejects “natural” enjoyment as coarse, vulgar and servile and replaces it with refined, disinterested and gratuous pleasures that emphasize culture and art atast he essence of the difference between the new power- elite and the old rich and the working class.

Studies have shown that such tourists enjoy good work and market conditions as well as educational credentials. They are primarily in the 30 to 40 age group. They share many of the preferences of intellectuals, like an interest in the most legitimate aspects of culture. Their interests include museums and folk art, sport, mountain climbing or walking hours. Many writers describe their taste for "ostentatious poverty" which is seen in their habit of dressing casually, liking bare and homely interiors and a cultivated relationship with nature.

Special interest tourists need not be in the middle salaried category alone. In Media, Advertising and Design areas, they have a very strong commitment to fashion, change style. Their morality seeks pleasure as an ethic, and a desire for a new novelty. They look down on the Candyfloss image of the traditional holiday camp and replace it because of their image of the bad taste. They got towards health, food, vegetarianism, herbs and natural pastures like walking, cycling, swimming and fishing. In Britain, we have seen a campaign for Real Holiday as against the rise of the package tourist. The special interest tourist equates Mass Tourism with mass-produced, unimaginative like beer, bread and ice-cream, instead of real things, and wants a return to the authentic taste and flavour of the individual way of doing things. The essence of the Real Holiday Campaign is that:

a) It involves a visit to a destination well away from the masses like Maldives, Bolivia or Lakshadweep. Thus, it opens up the whole world to the possibility of tourism, and

b) There is a tourist will make use of the specialist agent or a operator rather than a few major companies who do not promote it.
discriminating independent form of travel. The small niche product will promote not touristic trips but voyages of discovery.

Special interest tourists have a reading list of useful books on different countries. They look for travel rather than tourism; they stress on individual choice, avoiding the packed maker, the need to be educated. They go to the countryside and invoke a differential past which has been constructed with elements which never perhaps existed together historically. They function according to what could be termed as a Tourism Bill of Rights, which respects nature, the rights of the host populations and their customs and culture.

For such tourists stately homes, areas or regions are rehabilitated as tourist attractions; factories have been turned into museums; garden festivals and theme parks are created in castles, industrial sites and ecological spheres. Craft demonstrations are held at theme/heritage sites so people can watch, learn and participate in Renaissance activity. In such cases, they know that tourism has benefitted or saved what might have otherwise been completely lost. Such tourists also participate in cleaning the environment by holidays spent in clearing waste and debris on beaches and mountain slopes, and protecting wildlife.

Niche tour operators can also bring pressure, like their clients, on local governments to insist on conservation. This is done to ensure that mass tourism does not destroy the beauty of the destination, its natural attributes and customs. They promote traditional handmade crafts as souvenirs, accommodation in the vernacular architecture and textiles as well as local food and beverages. However, sometimes special interest tourists and tour operators also stereo type what is classified as authentic or real or typical about a destination. For example, American visiting Europe often feels like international refugees in a slow queue towards an unseen goal. "Push, push, push. These monuments are all the same. I haven't met a single local person. How can I when we are on this schedule. You think we have a night off, but no, we have to go to a performance". Such are the phrases commonly heard. Often, in season, crowds are solargethe tourists don't get a good view of the spectacle and they really get tense from the spectacle in their photographs.

SELFASSESSMENTEXERCISE

Discuss the requirement of a special interest tourist.
3.2 Alternative Tourism

Alternative tourists like to do things differently. They want to be less with other tourists and more with the living cultures. They aim to avoid using special tourist accommodation, transport and other services. They prefer to use or share the services of the local population. In this way they hope to experience some aspect of their lives.

Many tourists choose alternatives because they are concerned about the negative impact which Mass Tourism can have on a destination. Tour operators can specialise in such forms by focusing on people and their culture rather than providing created comforts. Such trips can be of an extended duration and can cost less than the traditional two-week vacation, but they can be high priced.

Travelling with "local friends" and the purpose is to come to one's own understanding of political, social and religious traditions. Destinations are out-of-the-way villages and tribal hamlets. Hotels and homes are characterized by-friendly atmosphere and cleanliness. Transport is crammed with locals going to market with their wares on camels or donkeys, boats in back waters or treks in the mountains.

India is a popular alternative destination. It is a "subtle mix of ancient and modern, ritual and urban, filled with local colour and vitality..." Nigeria also can become a popular alternative destination if its rich cultural heritage is given deserved promotion.

3.3 Other Determinants

Besides the motives mentioned in the earlier section there are also certain other determinants of tourism.

3.3.1 Psychological

Is tourism desirable? Is it a good thing to have for the tourist and the destination? Is it justified in a mean-to-an-end sense? As a break from work or as a medical need, tourism provides relaxation in a non-environment that is completely different from the home surrounding. In that sense, it is a psychological break. Colleagues, neighbours and friends however, influence our choices and pressure to conform is indeed great.

It is also fashionable to take a holiday at a certain time of the year or to a certain destination. Fashion in tourism is close to fashion in clothes. There can also be security in habitually taking the same holiday to a favourite hills or beach resort. In fact, tourism buying can be as customary as any other brand loyalty.
3.3.2 Socio-Political

Many societies encourage tourism as a form of rejuvenation. Many states give tourist entitlement to their employees. In some countries trade unions include visits to spas for over-worked or sick workers through a medical insurance scheme. Paid holidays also encourage participation in tourism. The political system also encourages certain preferences for holiday destinations as well as activities. This is done by choosing tourist destinations for holding conventions or conferences.

3.3.3 Economic

An important factor is disposable income or freedom from any money constraint. Tourism is psychologically and socially desirable as a consumer objective and the possession of the requisite means to satisfy the desire for tourism must be there.

In the West, when a person's income rises by one unit, they spend 1 1/2 units on tourism. This indicates a high propensity to travel. Where incomes are not high and money is concentrated in a few hands, the propensity to travel is likely to be far less. Business and incentive travel is also likely to be constrained by the money constraint which can be affected by economic depressions or recession. Governments can encourage outbound tourism by their tax policies and the permission to take foreign exchange out of the country.

The price of tourism in relation to other consumer expenditures is also important consideration. Special offers can, along with discounts, often make tourism more attractive than staying at home.

3.3.4 Time

Vacations are traditionally linked to tourism activity. Many institutions have increased breaks in the calendar rather than just single holidays so that people can avail the opportunity of free time to participate in leisure activity. These well regulated breaks in Europe in spring, summer and winter have encouraged people to take not one but perhaps two holidays in a year. For example, people with school-going children tour mainly during summer or winter vacations in the schools. The touristakenduringthesummervacationsmaybelongerwhencomparedtooneduring winter. Price and time have a great impact on tourism demand. The tourism industry adjusts tariffs with these seasons demand to encourage tourism as well as to increase profits.

There are other pressures like business, family, religion, educational and social that motivate tourists. Similarly, conferences and seminars, weddings, funerals or family reunions, or visits to centres of pilgrimage are factors that are supplementary or secondary feeders of tourism.

In many cases, facilities like accommodation, catering or special events and discounts also act as "pull factors" to encourage tourism or attract tourists.

4.0 CONCLUSION

So far, in this unit, you have learnt about special interest, alternative tourism, and other tourism determinants.

5.0 SUMMARY

A change in motivation or say different motivation has brought in new trends into tourism like special interest or alternative tourism. Knowing the motives of the tourist helps the tour operator/tourism professional to offer better services to the client and it is always better to ask for motivation and accordingly suggest the destination.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The moment we mention history, the general assumption is that we want to know about the past. But, wasn’t this question, why we intend to study the past? Well, we study the past because our present has evolved out of it, and to plan a better future. We have to critically analyze the past as well as the present. However, different methods, approaches, and inter-presentations are involved in this exercise. Ideological leanings and interests also determine the course of history writing. For example, the trend that dominated the European approach to the writing of history, for a long time, emphasized the unique events in the life of a particular region. They were viewed from the point of view of the power controlling the state. Therefore, the history of the world was seen as a history of the rulers, princes, and the aristocracy. There came another stage when social scientists tried to reorient methodology in history by adopting the methods of the physical sciences. Hence, historical methods were challenged to assert that all people have a history and that different areas of the world have different histories. Soon there developed the theory of historical materialism to show that history proceeded through an inevitable process of change from lower to higher forms of social organization. There existed a dialectical relationship between man and nature, and man's use of nature as well as the manner in which he harnessed what he needed for civilized his life. It was therefore possible to talk of the history of the people rather than the ruling class. In the present context, the abovementioned methodologies are also being questioned. Here we are not going into the debate of various methodologies by passing any value judgments. The idea is to make you aware of the fact that there are different views, methods, and trends in history.

This unit deals with the history of tourism over the years. It takes into account the various sources that are used to analyze this history, keeping in view the time period, i.e., periodisation. The transition from travel to modern tourism has also been dealt with. Why tourism professionals should study the history of tourism is another aspect dealt within this unit.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

After reading this unit, you should be able to:

- Understand broadly how the history of tourism came to be written.
- Familiarize yourself with the main sources used for writing the history of tourism.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 The Need for the History of Tourism

The history of tourism was for a long time the history of European tourism, the assumption being that tourism was most developed in Europe. However, there are economics, statistics, scientific Methodology, anthropology and sociology to develop on Inter-disciplinary projects. Their methodologies were limited to the statistical study of tourism, but they have identified problems that can be used to reconstruct the history of a period for which the statistical data is generally non-existent. As a result, we can apply this methodology to develop the history of tourism on a global scale. The main stream of objective study of the history of tourism is to understand the phenomenon in a particular society at a particular time. We do so in order to know the factors that encourage tourism development. Moreover, a study of the history of tourism can help illustrate a dynamic model of tourism development. We can evaluate the role of tourism and establish concepts that help to understand its impacts.

We, therefore, do not only reconstruct the past, but we also develop generalizations that are useful in understanding the present nature of the tourism phenomenon. The history of tourism also helps in developing theoretical frameworks within which the data about tourism can be verified.

To avoid simple generalizations, the data of the history of tourism has to be carefully assessed. In early history, we have archaeological evidence of inns, hotels, villages and transport. Such information is fragmentary and often covering periods of thousands of years. Moreover, interdisciplinary information was not always available in all periods and in all countries. For example, the French pioneered the history of tourism, but looked only at the holiday pattern of the aristocracy. The British looked at key events and factors like standard of living, free time, transport, spas and seaside resorts, and linked them to growth of the industry. Labour force, social legislation and local customs. But today, we look at tourism as a system. In this the physical, economic, technical, environmental, socio-political and cultural factors are studied to understand the links between the past and the present. And all this is used for tourism for future development.

The history of tourism has made an important breakthrough in two areas:

1) Identification of sources of data.
2) Use of both written and oral history

A critical examination of the historical process always highlights news, representational fields of interest can be viewed. The establishment of the history of tourism also helps in establishing the credibility of tourism as a new academic discipline (within Nigeria, still... in infancy). The sources for the history of tourism are very diverse and related to the time context for their validity. For example, the sources used to know about the ancient period are:

1) Literary records
2) Inscriptions
3) Graffiti
4) Papyrus receipts
5) Seal
6) Archeological evidence including painted pottery
7) Diplomatic records
8) Archives, both private and public
9) Oral history and folk culture, both traditional and personal, etc.

3.1.1 Statistical Records

There are primary sources and are of recent origins. Statistical or numerical data began to be collected only after it was recognized that tourism has an important economic impact. Before 1914, tourism statistics did not exist, although secondary sources like health, safety, police, migration, taxation and census records were used to make assumptions on the development of tourism.

Since 1920, the statistical base of tourism has been increasing. In 1921, Britain began to collect tourism statistics and by 1945, most countries were doing so. The volume of tourism statistics grew with the emergence of the International Union of Official Tourism Organizations that have achieved great standardization of the data, although its reliability is often questioned. This is because there are at least 42 definitions of tourism, and tourists may count to the world. Prior to 1920, the database of travel was taken from railway records, postal authorities and wherever possible, Passport and Visa authorities. From such records, it was possible to:

- Reconstruct the volume of people who travelled
- The place they visited.

The census report and civil service commission dealing with paid leave have also contributed to information regarding the holiday pattern of the salaried employees. Thus, there is a range of data from which information regarding tourism can be collected. Since tourism is a multi-disciplinary activity, the sources of data are varied but such data may not be comparable in all cases.
SELFASSESSMENT EXERCISE

List all the sources used to know about the ancient period 3.1.2

Secondary Sources

Under this category come the:

1) Personal documents that include diaries, journals and letters of educated travellers, academics and intellectuals.
2) Mass communications which include newspapers, journals, advertisements, guidebooks, magazines, etc. which have been used to inform and persuade the public.

These resources have been studied to form a picture of tourism such as itineraries, important events and holiday patterns. They can be used as cross-referencing materials.

3.2 Periodisation and Concepts

With the passage of time, the class of people involved in tourism have changed. As tourism becomes more democratized, the nature of the facilities also becomes more standardized if not universal.

Using the concepts of the emergence of the leisure class to distinguish tourism from other forms of travel, we can democratize, then nature of the facilities also becomes more standardized if not universal.

Using the concepts of the emergence of the leisure class to distinguish tourism from other forms of travel, we can establish six periods in the history of tourism.

1) Ancient Era
2) Imperial Era
3) Pilgrimage
4) The Grand Tour Era
5) The Transition Era
6) The Modern Era

The following concepts were commonly used during all periods:

i) Motivation: the value of new experience and the transformation of travel from survival to an improvement in the quality of life. This includes:
   a)
Curiosity: moving from the known to the unknown.
b) Anticipation: what you hope to find, seed and do. To look for something and evaluate every new experience.

Holiday: the word has two sources

a) Religion
b) Secular
c) In Europe, a day was set aside, at the end of a week cycle, for religious rituals and a day was called Holiday. Intime, saint day and certain other observances were added to the number of holidays when no work was done and everyone celebrated.

d) The Secular tradition was a part of the imperial system when the state granted holidays to celebrate imperial glory on these holidays, no work was done and the people participated in feasting and fun. Public games and spectator sports were the highlight on such occasions.

Intime, there was a religious and secular combined and the day of rest became a part of all societies.

Mode of Travel was the state of the art in terms of transport networks and routes, vehicles, cost of travel, documentation and safe passage wayside facilities and conveniences to the traveller.

iv) Tourism impacts: the influence of tourism not only on the lifestyle of the people, but in bringing about changes in consumption and production as well as wealth.

3.3 Ancient Period

Inscriptions, seals and cave/rock paintings set care evidence of travel in the period. Such evidence has suggested that was both difficult and dangerous. There was no concept of safer return. Overland and seajourney were undertaken, but travel was slow, time consuming and route networks were not well developed. The cost of travel was high because wayside facilities were rarely available. Human beings were still subject to the power of nature, and travel was seasonal. Yet, these significant developments encouraged travel:

i) The creation of specific paths and routes used primarily by traders and pilgrims and perhaps adventurers.

ii) Development of specialized vehicles for travel over land or water.
ii) Growth of urban centers and later cities along riverbanks and coastlines such as centers are known to have been established in Mesopotamia, China, and India. The growth of cities indicated the need for political and economic contacts and the role of couriers, carriers, and caravans became important.

As traveling followed a pattern of networks, resting places and food resources were provided along these routes. Soon we see the outposts growing into market towns or commercial centers that increased the range and scope of travel to distant parts of the known world. Hence, the increase in contacts between different parts of the world, the nature of consumption, and travel began to change. As a consequence, specialization began to emerge. For example, wagon forgoods and chariots for passengers.

With specialization in vehicles there was a improvement of paths and routes, with paving and distance marketers as well as trees for shade. Better routes led to increased knowledge of the fabled wealth and prosperity of distant lands. The consequences were many, like emergence of wars of conquest or trade and commerce.

3.3 Early Empires

In the West, tourism became established in the Egyptian empires and reached its zenith in the Roman period. In the East, the coastal empires in China and the Mauryan Empire in India were known for providing extension facilities to the travelers. Roads networks and transport were systematized into imperial highways, secondary roads for trade and village paths, infrastructure for travel like caravanserais, inns, taverns and 'pantagoras' were common. Wells were dug, security pickets were placed at convenient distances.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Enumerate how many periods that can be established in the history of tourism.

By this time, there was a distribution between travel and the phenomenon of tourism. Whereas, facilities along the roads were rough and often provided by the State at no cost, well-to-do travelers enjoyed special facilities. They were accompanied by kitchen staff, servants, to look after luggage of the household, tents, animals, foods and other stores, water supply, etc. The evidence of such elaborate arrangements indicates a certain sophistication in in the ability to travel in styles. The traveler not only enjoyed the journey, but had home comforts at their disposal.
destination. The stranger was known to bring prosperity and consume local services and products.

All Asiatic cultures have the tradition of courtesy of the stranger. Folklore, folk tales and a variety of literary works were told and ideas exchanged among travelers.

3.4.1 Egyptian Civilization and Phenomenon

The Egyptian civilization attracted many tourists. The lighthouse of Alexandria was considered one of the seven wonders of the Ancient world. Here, we see the genesis of nascent tourism related to curiosity and pleasure. Herodotus, the Greek traveler, has written about journeys enlivened by women playing on castanets and men playing the flute, while together the rest of the company stood and clapped to get her during the voyage. On arrival at the destination there was a celebratory feast, often with a sacrifice for thanksgiving. There was a lot on wine drinking and festivity at the end of the journey.

Graffiti and massage on the walls were symbolic of the fame of Egypt's monuments. Between April and November, many tourists travelled long distances to see the glorious monuments of Egypt. They returned with souvenirs to show off to friends at home. But tourism was seasonal and travel was taken when the weather was pleasant. There were adventures, however, when the Phoenicians who extended the boundaries of the known world to the Atlantic in the West and Africa in the South from the 11th century B.C. onwards. They also developed overland facilities and used their maritime skills to bridge rivers and develop trunk routes. They were also the first to use money as a form of exchange, which helped the traveller to lighten his load. No longer was it necessary to carry servants and supplies as it was possible to buy food and services along the way.

3.4.2 The Persian Empire

The Persian improved the travelling infrastructure because their empire expanded in the area. They designed roads and developed carriers with four-wheel sand covered overhead. Along with merchants, who now travelled all along the Mediterranean, the phenomenon of tourism also became established.

3.4.3 Greeks

New dimension of tourism were developed by the Greeks, who had extended the known world East of Africa. Their maritime expertise was based on the growth of the city-states along the seacoast. This was because the mountains in the internal were not conducive to the development of land routes. Their contribution to the development of tourism were several:

i) They established the system of exchange of currency, as the currency of some city state was accepted outside the Greek states. The Greek language became the common language in the Mediterranean. The Greek hosted festival to attract travellers from all over the world. One important festival was the Olympic Games held to display creative athleticism in honour of the God Zeus.

iv) Scholars came to Greece to debate with its philosophers and exchange medical skills with physicians and men of science. The city states became attractions for visitors. Athens was a renowned destination then as now. It had hospitality facilities that provided food, accommodation and entertainment like floor shows, dancing girls, and gambling. The Greeks introduced the custom of living aproxeuros, an active guide who advised tourists on where to go and how to travel safely.

vii) The Romans

The Romans had a keen admiration for Greek manners and lifestyle. However, they refined most of the new developments introduced by Greeks through their remarkable sense of organization. They had under their control (both politically and culturally) the largest empire in the West. For a long period, a Roman Legion brought peace and prosperity to many lands and people. As a result, not only the Roman elite, but also the trading middle class began to build villas along the coastline and in the world luxurious. Artifacts from various corners of the world. Tourism thrived in this period for the following reasons:

i) Roman coins were the official currency all over the empire. The emperor reserved them by an excellent and planned network of roads, called the Appian ways and waterways were also in popular use in all parts of the empire.

ii) Greek and Latin became the official languages of the empire which stretched from Scotland in the West to the Euphrates in the East.
iv) Asthe wealth and prosperity of Roman citizen increased, they were motivated by pleasure, curiosity as well as an interest in the cultures of the people they brought under their control.

v) They developed spectacles in relief from boredom. Games and gladiatorial contests were popular events.

vi) Sightseeing trips and excursions took the tourist to Greek temples, sanctuaries and works of art. In Egypt and Asia (modern Turkey) were owned for their magnificent structures and became popular destinations. Unnamed scholars had created an itinerary of these wonders for which Roman visitors were attracted. Travel to minerals spring or what today, were referred to as health tourism was as an important activity. The springs were closely associated with shrines and drew pilgrims as well. Literary references made certain naturally beautiful places an attraction for the educated travelers.

vii) There were expectations crossed from Greece via Persia or Mesopotamia to India. But travelers’ accounts are few. Greek accounts mention that in India, chariot roads were well laid out and horses, elephants and camels were a common mode of transport. Trees for shade, wells, resthouses and security were also well organized. The Arthashastra, the Roman word for the travel in India, described the importance of the travel infrastructure for the stated classification of routes and types of vehicles. This is an indication that there was a well developed mode of travel in India. For the military, the commercial traveler and the civilian. Travelers had to pay a tax to travel in India. The commercial traveler provided access to goods brought from the hinterland. Foreigners were accommodated in serais at the city gates where all services were provided to them. Therefore viii) In India, during the early period as sophisticated agricultural economy madethe export of cash crops and important trade link. Because of the predominance of trade routes over the head crossing between Asia and Europe, trade tours were an important feature of Indian community life. Caravanserais were therefore an important development in the period. From hymns, Sanskrit poems, we learn that sporting events and rituals and sacrifices were also popular festivities. Insurance and safe passage of goods, regulation of prices, weight and measures and the use of gold, silver and copper were rates of exchange also indicate a well-developed mode of trade and travel. At this time, the Buddhist sangha established the tradition of the pilgrimage, where monks went from village to village and court to court preaching the value of a middle path. Resthouses or Ranthgars were provided for the mendicant travelers.

was strict control over the movements of travelers. They had to carry on note for safe passage from one territory to another. For their entertainment, taverns and dance halls were allowed, but again, inspectors ensured that the conduct was not un orderly; gambling was licensed and was source of revenue for the state. Travelling for pleasure on the rivers and to the hills was a tradition started by the royal courts. But such movement attracted all those who had business at the court to move with them from the heat and dust of the cities to the rural calm of the summer retreat.

An example worth sitting here is that of Mughal emperors. They had great love for nature and traveled extensively. They contributed towards what today we call resort development.

3.2 Pilgrimage

We have seen that wish fulfillment was an important catalyst that had historically influenced travel. The human community, despite its highly developed capability, was always faced with problems that defied human solutions. From an anthropological and symbolic to the development of theology, we see the appeal of the supernatural that has been greater than the laws of nature. The pilgrimage (tirthyatra) was therefore a journey undertaken for betterment on the spiritual and material plane.

The key elements of the pilgrimage are belief and knowledge within a particular cultural context. In traditional societies, a pilgrimage earned god’s grace and moral leadership in the community because sacred rituals and texts sanctified certain places associated with divine revelation. This was true of all religions.

Oracles housed in hot springs, rivers and banks along with the veneration of nature were early forms of pilgrimage.

Different religions (Christianity, Islam & Judaism) are similar in associating shrines and relics of their martyrs and saints. Pilgrims visited distant shrines associated with their beliefs.

The pilgrimage was a release from poverty, war, sickness, persecution and misery beyond the control of human beings. Pilgrims always traveled in throng and were on the road for a long period of time. They used the facilities of merchants and sanctified them at major fairs, which were located close to shrines sacred tova and tanks. Monasteries also provided refreshment and rest to the pilgrim. In many cases, people went on pilgrimage not out of devotion but because they enjoyed traveling through unknown lands in order to experience the novelties on the way. The pilgrims added to our knowledge of geographical and knowledge of what the world had to offer. They were often adventurers and explorers as well as being men of knowledge and culture.

In the age of imperialism, many traditional beliefs were undermined, but the pilgrimage provided a resource to those who wanted to preserve their cultural identity. Today, sociologists have boarded the concept of the pilgrimage to include non-sacred activities like travel to homes of modern “idols” and “opinion leaders” (film stars and others) in rare eco-systems and environmental and ethnic regions. These searches for roots is yet another form of pilgrimage that has inspired many across the world to undertake a journey back home.
In a country like India, where the mass of the people tourism may be economically unfeasible, the pilgrimage is a vital living experience. With higher personal income and better education, there is an increasing secularization of beliefs and pleasure components are being added to the familiar pilgrims' routes and itineraries. Consequently, monasteries, temples, and shrines have now begun to advertise special tours because the economic benefits of pilgrimage/tourism have become a lure for these trusts.

Explain the characteristics associated with different religions during the pilgrimage.

3.2 Grand Tour

The term is popularly understood to describe a circuit of Western Europe understood by a wealthy social elite for culture, education, and pleasure. It is frequent reference point in the history of tourism in Europe. Most modern studies have a sentimental image of the tutor, without recognizing that it was the first extensive movement of tourists for which we have primary source like letters, journals, and diaries, of tourists. These sources indicate that any extensive movement of tourists is brought about by a particular social and cultural environment and each country and develops own perspective on the nature of the Grand Tour.

The impact of such a tour on art and intellectual life, social and economic history, as well as literature, indicates that the aristocracy were perhaps most visible. However, it is the middle class, both merchant and scribe, who have recorded the passage of the tourist, while the artisan has passed on his craft and skill in these search for a master. There are several debatable assertions regarding the Grand Tour. That it followed edaps prescribed route and was bisurel in place. Now, we have evidence of no set pattern being followed and also, raveling as fast as possible. It is also questionable at the Grand Tour was an essential part of diplomatic training or the rounding off of an spell at Oxford or Cambridge. Was it the result of the secularization of religion? Was the decline of the tour due to the changing cultural values with the increase in the size of the middle class? The idea of the Grand Tour, as an extensive itinerary for the tourist to follow, was something to all false factors in the course of its development. We can mention the characteristic of the Grand Tour as follows:

1) The Grand Tour can be in terms of class, which would determine the places visited and the mode of travel. For example, the
The nobility would follow the coast. The aristocracy and high officials would follow suit as well as visit renowned centers of learning.

The Grand Tour can be defined by the destinations on the itinerary, but such a definition would limit the classes involved in extension travel.

The Oxford English dictionary defines the Grand Tour as a tour of the principal cities and places of interest in Europe, formally said to be an essential part of the education of young men of "good birth" and "fortune". This definition, besides being Euro-centric, has class limitations and has been broadened to suggest that it was ifcertain places and cities of Western Europe undertaken primarily, but not exclusively for education and pleasure.

Reasons for undertaking the Grand Tour were also diverse: career, education, culture, literary, health, scientific, business and economic. At different times one or more of these motivations could have been the primary one, depending on the social status, cultural environment and trends in transport and accommodation.

The Grand Tour itinerary was closely linked to the availability of transport as well as facilitation. The timing was also related to seasonal variations as well as events and activities of the concerned individuals. Similar trends affected the length of stay at different destinations.

An emergent tourism industry also began to direct tourism flow in the 19th century as commercial facilities were required to supplement the informal and formal arrangements that merchants, pilgrims and tourists had commonly used in earlier times. Thus accommodation in inns, taverns and bed and breakfast became common, particularly in the cities. Regular transport services were established and guides as well as porters, cycling and walking tours also gained in popularity. Finally, banking arrangements through exchange notes were made to guide the tourist. The stage was accommodation, catering and entertainment to the visitor. The trained manpower also existed. Recreation of facilities like tennis, cricket and golf clubs, theatres and libraries are common features of such resorts. That was how India herself was ready to be launched on the world tourism scene.
